Geologist Says the Time Is Many Years in the Future. Parker, of the United States Geological Survey, estimates that country's annual production of coal as far forward as the year 2055. By that time, according to records to date, the United States will be records to date, the United States will be using 2,300,000,000 tons a year. The average annual production during the decade from 1916 to 1925 will be about 600,000,000 tons. The total production in 1907 was 480,450,042 tons.

The geologist prophesies that future generations "will have so far developed methods of subduing and utilizing other forces of nature that the need of coal for the production of heat, light, and power will, to a great extent, have been eliminated." Until these other natural forces are subdued, however, it appears that there will be enough coal to supply the nation.

Mr. Parker doubts "if the production of anthracite will ever greatly exceed the production of 1967, which was about 76,-000,000 long tons. When the period of decline does set in," he says, "the decrease in production will be gradual, and some anthracite will be used well into the next century; but it is slowly and surely becoming more and more of a luxury, and we may look for gradually increasing prices as the workings become deeper and thinner beds are drawn upon."
